Monitoring patent activities to track technology trends, understand the competitive landscape, and anticipate future developments

The increase in energy density is one of the main drivers for battery technology. On the anode side, silicon is a promising material to replace graphite and enhance battery performance, but several technical challenges exist, slowing the adoption of this technology. The main challenges in adopting silicon-based anodes for Li-ion batteries involve improving the cycling and electrochemical performance of silicon anode materials, as well as refining the synthesis process to increase yields, reduce costs, and lower environmental impact. Key technical solutions under development include creating various silicon-based materials (e.g., nanostructured, composite, highly porous, and high-density materials) and developing electrolytes and binders specifically suited to silicon anode materials.

R&D laboratories and industrial companies all around the world recognized the potentiality of silicon as an anode material for Li-ion batteries, leading to significant investments to bring this technology to the market.

In this context, patent analysis perfectly complements market research to offer a deep understanding of the competitive landscape, anticipate changes, detect business opportunities early, get ahead of cutting-edge technology developments, and uncover competitors' R&D and IP strategies.

The Silicon Anode Li-ion Batteries patent monitoring service enables you to stay continuously up to date with the evolving patent landscape by providing:

- An initial dataset covering all patents published up to the previous quarter, categorized by supply chain segments (anode material, anode electrode, binders, current collectors, electrolytes, battery cells, battery packs, recycling).
- One-year access to an interactive dashboard to dynamically explore the patent landscape and instantly drill down from a high-level view to specific players, technologies, and patents.
- Quarterly updates of the database and dashboard, including new patent applications, newly granted patents, expired or abandoned patents, and IP collaborations, with a focus on key highlights on emerging trends, key players, and technological developments.
